Introduction

HIS inventory, now printed in full for the first time, was filed in the office of the county clerk of Fairfax county, Virginia, by those charged with the final appraisement of the personal effects of Washington at Mount Vernon. Mr. William C. Lane, librarian of Harvard University, states in his "Inventory of Washington's Library" that

"The original will [of Washington] is still to be seen there [Fairfax Court House], and this with the other papers mentioned was copied into the large record volumes, but at the bottom of p. 326, Liber J. I following the 'account of the estate of the late Gen'l Washington with Laurence Lewis' is found this note, — 'Inventory and appraisement of the Estate of Gen'l George Washington Deceased (ought to be here Recorded). For Inventory look to Wills &c of August Court 1810 filed. T. C. Nash.' But on inquiry for the files of this date it appears that all the original papers of this time and earlier were scattered during the occupation of Fairfax by the Federal troops during the Civil War. The Washington Inventory may possibly have been saved, but its present location, if it is extant, is unknown to the writer."

Fortunately this paper was preserved, and has now found a fitting niche in a collection of manuscripts where it not only will be free from accidental loss but is now made accessible by publication. An imperfect copy of the Inventory was in the possession of John A. Washington, of whom Edward Everett obtained a copy for use in his "Life of George Washington," printed in 1860; but some leaves of the manuscript had been lost. This imperfect form has been reprinted several times, but never as a separate piece. What pertains to the library of Washington has been fully studied and annotated by Mr. Lane in the volume on the Washington collection in the Boston Athenæum (Griffin-Lane), printed in 1897.

In view of that study I have not thought it necessary to annotate that part of the Inventory, not even to correct the many errors in names and titles. The document is printed as it was written, and may thus serve as a basis for detailed study in special lines.

The document has a high personal interest. The values affixed to each article are purely arbitrary, and are in no sense correct appraisals, whether of the market value of the thing, or of the value to its possessor, from actual cost or from association. The estate was not in dispute; there was no tax system which imposed making a correct valuation upon the executors; and the formal presentment of the list fulfilled the requirements of the occasion. The sums affixed could be omitted without impairing the real value of the paper, for this value lies in the light it throws upon the contents of the house at Mount Vernon, and incidentally upon the taste of Washington in gathering them.

It may be said at this point, that Washington himself was not wholly responsible for the contents. This is especially true of the library, which had grown through gifts rather than through purchases, and thus only in a slight degree reflected the personal taste or judgment of the man. It would give a very wrong impression to pass upon his reading from the list of his books, for it becomes evident at a glance that a majority of the volumes had either been sent to him by writers looking for recognition, or been bought in a desire to assist author or publisher in a venture affected with some public interest. Washington was no reader, and his only enthusiasm lay in books on agriculture, which he studied and laboriously extracted with a minuteness that was extraordinary. As a young officer in the colonial militia he gave some attention to military books, and he is known to have read the play of "Cato." There is little evidence that he cared for history, even of the War of Independence; and in only one instance has a political volume, immediately dealing with his own conduct, been found with his marginal notes.1 An unusual instance of his attention is that of the single word in his copy of Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," where he has questioned the printing of the good Scotch word "fiars," believing it to be a misprint for the word "fairs." In his diaries he never mentions the books he was reading, and his correspondence rarely refers to books, unless formally to acknowledge a gift or a dedication, or gives any evidence of a bookish learning. To speak with frankness, he read for a purely commercial purpose; to fit himself for service in the camp, and to conduct his farming on a profitable basis. He never became a great general; and his agriculture never became a source of profit. In neither case was he responsible for this result. He never had an army efficient for acting on the offensive consistently, and a necessity for using slave labor balked every effort to improve his lands.

In other respects the Inventory is more satisfactory, meagre as it is. In the last forty years the Washington estate, as it was called, was finally settled and a number of relics and manuscripts came into the market. There was much of undoubted value, and the prices were adequate, so much so as to encourage the fraudulent. For many years a rather clumsy imitation of Washington's writing was sold to the unwary, in the form of checks purporting to have been drawn upon a bank in Alexandria.¹ This was an innocent deception compared to some that have been put forth in recent years, and sometimes by dealers of recognized position, who could not plead ignorance as an excuse. Not only have papers been wrongly assigned to Washington, but also to members of his family, and often without a particle of evidence to prove their origin or authenticity, and in the face of proof that they could not be as represented. His book-plate has been reproduced and inserted in volumes that this Inventory could show had never been in his library. Undated manuscripts have been assigned to a particular year, and a story woven round them that would grace any work of fiction, and that has proved of great profit to the romancer. Unfortunately this Inventory can be used only within narrow limits to correct such offers and offenses, and will not serve at all in testing fraudulent documents. The descriptions given of pictures, for example, are not sufficient to permit a full identification, but if twenty portraits of Washington are reported as coming from Mount Vernon, there is ground in this volume for meeting so wholesale a claim.

It is from the letters of the earlier years that a really fair idea can be gained of Washington's tastes in household furnishings. A Virginia planter had only one market for his principal product, tobacco, and that market was in England or Scotland. Sending his tobacco there, the account was settled almost entirely by such manufactures and other articles as were needed on the plantation. The system was as costly as it was unsatisfactory. The planter was rarely contented with the price he obtained for his tobacco, and the difficulties of ordering goods at such a distance were greatly increased by the poor quality of the goods themselves. Carelessness, shopworn articles, indifferent workmanship, and an open disregard of orders complicated the transaction, and the time required for a correction (even if a correction was possible) made the remedy ineffectual. A definite quality of exports, commercially known as "colonials," of second and third qualities, was considered as good enough for the colonies, and hence arose the exact descriptions included in the planters' orders.

In the colonial days of Virginia almost every article used in the household, apart from what was grown in the garden or fields, was obtained from England. An invoice was a formidable affair, ranging from tools and nails to medicines, perfumed powder and suits, from pickles and cider to shoes and cloths. The last order by Martha Custis, in 1758, amounted to £309. 8s 5d and it would be difficult to name any article of ordinary use that had been omitted. This happened only three months after an order amounting to £103.15s $5\frac{1}{4}d$ had been filled. In 1764 the total invoice ordered was £474.2.9, and there is no evidence to show that the demand diminished in the years after the stamp tax troubles, when domestic industries were supposed to be rising into importance. The plantation of the south, with its large number of slaves, was economically too dependent upon England to be made free by a local, limited, and probably temporary industry in the northern colonies.

I now quote from some of these early orders which Washington sent to his English agents.

In April, 1757, when Washington was at Fort Loudoun, he directed his kinsman, Richard Washington, of London, to send him

"A marble Chimney piece of the Dimensions Inclosd (given by the Workmen) the Cost not to exceed 15 Guineas. N. B. let it be carefully packd"

Also "I Neat Landskip 3 feet by 21½ Inches = I Inch Margin for a Chim"—a somewhat crude way of obtaining anything of merit. These London merchants at times sent to their Virginia customers a gift of a picture or piece of furniture; but they could hardly have been connoisseurs of art. It was safe to look to them for "Two neat Mahogany Tables 4½ feet square when spread and to join occasionally;" and "I Dozn neat and strong Mahogany chairs at 21/." There was some standard by which to judge a "neat" Mahogany bit of furniture, or a "fashionable lock for a partition door;" but a "neat Landskip" was too indefinite. It is safe to say that few of the paintings at Mount Vernon, apart from some of the portraits, had any artistic value. In November the goods came by the Peggy and Elizabeth. The chimney-piece was in thirty-one feet of "fine new veined marble," with plinths and iron cramps for mounting it (£8. 6. 6); the two mahogany tables cost £6. 10, and the chairs, described as "best gothick chairs, wthen Pincushion seats, stufft in y^e best manner and covered with horse hair," were billed at £12. 12, exclusive of packing. The landscape was "after Claude Lorrain" and cost £3. 15. 6.

In the cargo of the Salley, Captain Dick, bound to Rappahannock, in Virginia, came in August, 1757:

A Bedstead with Mahogany carved and fluted pillars for niture, lind with Tammy, and carved cornishes

A short time after Washington wrote:

To Richard Washington [September, 1757.]

DEAR SIR: Be pleasd over and above what I wrote for in a Letter of the 15th April and 10th Inst to send me one doz. strong chairs of about fifteen shillings price, the bottoms to be exactly made by the Inclosd Dimensions and of three different colours to suit the paper of three of the bed Chambers (also wrote for in my last). I must acquaint you, Sir, with the Reason of this request. I have one doz, chairs that were made in the Country neat but too weak for common sitting. I therefore purpose to take the bottoms out of those and put them into these now ordered, while the bottoms which you send will do for the former and furnish the Chambers: for this Reason the Workman must be very exact, neither making the bottoms larger nor smaller than the dimensions, otherwise the change cant be made. be kind enough to give directions that these chairs equally with the others and Tables be carefully packd and stowed, without this Caution they are liable to infinite damage. I am Dr Sir, Y! most obedt &c.

The whole charge amounting to £48.7.2.

In the same shipment came from Richard Farrer some glass ware and branched candlesticks, and "I pair Seasons, & I pair Music's figures" for the sticks.

Another invoice of some interest came in the following March, for it included some articles of ornament. Washington had in September, 1759, asked his factor to obtain for him 8 pieces, as follows:

- 4. One of Alex^r ye Great; another of Julius Cæsar; an^r of Ch⁸ 12 Sweden; and a 4th of ye King of Prussia.

 N. B. These are not to exceed 15 Inch⁸ in hight, nor 10 in width for brok⁸ Pedim¹⁹
- 2 other Busts of Prince Eugene & y* Duke of Marlbor^h somewh¹ small!
- 2 wild Beasts not to exceed 12 Inch* in highth nor 18 in length.

Sundry small Ornaments for Chimy piece.

The selection showed his evident taste for great generals, and he was still ambitious of military service, if it could be given without injury to his claims of rank. It must have been something of a disappointment to find, on opening the cases, that his wishes had been thus carried into effect:

- A groupe of Æneas carrying his Father out of Troy with 4 Statues, viz. his Father Anchises, his wife Creusa, himself and his son Ascanius, neatly finisht and bronzd with Copper

Two Ornamented Vases with Faces & Festoons of Grapes & Vine Leaves &cª finishd neat & bronzd in Copp ^r
Two Lyons after the Antique Lyon's in Italy, finisht Neat & bronzd with copper, £1.5 each 2.10
The agent thought some explanation was necessary, for he wrote:
"These is ye best Ornaments I coud possibly make for the Chimney Piece, and of all the wild Beasts as could be made there is none thought better than the Lyons. The manner of placing them on ye Chimney piece shd be thus A groupe of Vase Æneas Vase Groupe of Flora Bacchus There is no Busts of Alexander ye Great [none at all of Charles 12th of Sweden] Julius Cæsar, King of Prussia, Prince Eugene nor Duke of Marlborough of the size desired; and to make Models woud be very Expensive, at least 4 Guineas each; but I can make Busts exactly to the size wrote for [15 Inches] and very good ones at the rate of 16/ each of Homer, Virgil, Horace, Cicero, Plato, Aristotle, Seneca, Galens, Vestall Virgin Faustina, Chaucer, Spencer, Johnson, Shakespear, Beaumont, Fletcher, Milton, Prior, Pope, Congreve, Swift, Addison, Dryden, Locke, Newton."

In June, 1768, he asked for "as good a spy glass as can be bought for 60/ of a good artist." A year later he wanted "a large hunting horn, bound tight round with small brass wire from one end to the other, and secured in such a manner as to prevent the wires slipping," quite an order for "ye most fashionable kind of Queens Ware," and as handsome a fowling piece, three and one-half feet in the barrel, as could be bought for three guineas. In July, 1771, he orders "a candlestick with two lights, and a shade to read and write by, such as they have in the Public Offices, not to exceed 29/," and two sockets for seals, one to have topaz or some other handsome stone, with the Washington arms neatly engraved thereon, and the other, a plain stone, with the Washington crest.

The extracts could be extended, but enough has been given to show the little connection possible between the articles bought and those listed in the Inventory. During the War of Independence little was added to the Mount Vernon household, and after the peace, Washington was too much occupied in making good the sad results of neglect and inefficiency to buy largely. His correspondence with Tobias Lear is suggestive, and that with Clement Biddle would add much to our knowledge of his purchases. After all, the net result is to be found in this Inventory, and it will hardly be possible to go beyond it in seeking to reconstruct Mount Vernon as it was in his day.

The survey is an early product of Washington's work, and is obtained from the Library of Congress. It is strange that there is no floor plan of the house at Mount Vernon that could be used in this volume. The only one in print was in such a form that its reproduction was forbidden.
